JOSHUA W. JONES is an award-winning public relations and public affairs practitioner. He has provided strategic counsel to some of the world's leading corporations, political candidates and associations. Having consulted for more than 1,500 clients, he has extensive experience in advocacy, management and communications that have translated into victories across the country. From writing presidential speeches to preparing C-suite presentations for shareholders, Jones has extensive experience in taking organizations to the next level.

During the George W. Bush administration, Jones served as a site lead for the White House Office of Presidential Advance, where he was responsible for planning, organizing and executing presidential events.

Jones has appeared on broadcast news networks, including NBC and ABC, and his work has been featured on cable news networks across the country. He has appeared in more than 50 print publications and is a frequent guest on syndicated talk radio. Jones received a dual degree in public relations and political science and an MBA from the University of Georgia, where he was named among the institution's "40 Under 40" in 2017. In 2019, the State YMCA of Georgia recognized Jones as a distinguished alumnus. He currently resides in Atlanta.
